WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

January 7, 2026

Cross Country Storm

- Two cross-country storms are expected to bring rain to millions across more than 30 states beginning Thursday.
- This storm is packing a severe weather threat for the Deep South and the potential for snow from the higher elevations of the Four Corners through the Central Plains and Upper Midwest.
- The first storm will race out of the Southwest on Thursday and is expected to bring rain across much of the Southern Plains.
- A low-level severe thunderstorm threat covers that same area and extends into Arkansas and southern Missouri Wednesday night into Thursday.
- A widespread area of rain will cover much of the Midwest, Mississippi and Tennessee valleys beginning Thursday afternoon.
- A low-end flash flood threat covers Chicagoland in Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana.
- A cold front associated with the first storm will move into the Deep South Friday, sparking the potential for more significant severe weather.
- NOAA's Storm Prediction Center has issued a risk of severe thunderstorms for an area covering the Lower Mississippi and Tennessee valleys.
- These storms could be capable of generating damaging wind gusts, hail and possibly tornadoes.
- On Friday, the second storm will develop once again in the Four Corners and move out of the southern Rockies.
