Flood Activity California

- Water-logged San Diego started monstrous cleanup efforts Tuesday after record-breaking rains battered homes, choked streets with mud and damaged trolley lines — causing millions in damage and displacing several people.
- Hundreds were rescued from flooded streets and swollen rivers across the region.
- San Diego Mayor Gloria told reporters Tuesday that in the neighborhoods of Southcrest and Mountain View as many as 100 homes may be uninhabitable due to flood damage. He called the impact of the damage “absolutely devastating.”
- By midday Tuesday, San Diego had logged at least $67 million in damage to public infrastructure, damage that city officials hope will be reimbursed by the state, said Chris Heiser, director of the city’s Office of Emergency Services.
- City and county governments proclaimed local emergencies, and Gov. Gavin Newsom also declared an emergency in San Diego County.
- Monday’s storm went down as San Diego’s rainiest January day — preliminary numbers had San Diego International Airport getting 2.70 inches of rain between midnight and 4 p.m. — since record-keeping started in 1850.
- Rescuers plucked scores of people from homes and streets and from surging rivers — with about 125 people rescued in Southcrest alone, San Diego Fire-Rescue Chief Colin Stowell said. There were an additional 50 rescue incidents in places including San Ysidro, Mission Valley and San Diego riverbanks.
- The La Presa neighborhood in Spring Valley was especially hard hit. Water inundated entire streets and reached 5 to 6 feet high inside homes.
