Tropical Activity

Atlantic – Tropical Storm Philippe

- Tropical Storm Philippe is continuing to raise eyebrows after a dramatic shift in the forecast track overnight that now includes New England and Atlantic Canada, where impacts from the storm are expected to begin this weekend.
- Nearly the entire state of Maine and portions of northern New Hampshire are now in Philippe's forecast cone as the storm moves northward through the western Atlantic Ocean over the next several days.
- The National Hurricane Center (NHC) says Tropical Storm Philippe remains disorganized as it continues to bring rain and wind impacts to portions of the U.S. and British Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico.
- Philippe has maximum sustained winds of 45 mph with some higher gusts and is located about 150 miles to the north-northwest of St. Thomas in the U.S. Virgin Islands.
- Tropical Storm Philippe is moving to the northwest at 9 mph. The NHC says Philippe is expected to turn to the north-northwest later Wednesday, followed by a faster movement to the north on Thursday and Friday.
- On the forecast track, the center of Philippe will move away from Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands on Wednesday and will then approach Bermuda Thursday night and Friday.
