WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

Flood Risk

Hawaii

- A Kona Low is soaking much of Hawaii this week with heavy tropical rainfall and occasional strong thunderstorms.
- Flood Watches cover the entire state through Thursday as several inches of rain is expected to fall into the weekend from the persistent soggy pattern.
- The heaviest rain is expected on the southern-facing windward slopes as the area of low pressure draws in surges of tropical moisture from the south.
- The Kona Low, which will be weak at first, will drift slowly eastward toward Kauai through Wednesday. Rain is increasing over the western half of the state on Wednesday, with 1-3 inches already falling in western Kauai and more than a half-inch around Honolulu on Oahu.
- Another Kona Low will drop in from the northwest through the day Wednesday and set up just west of Kauai by Thursday, the FOX Forecast Center said. This second low is stronger than the first one, with deeper southerly winds that will draw up more significant tropical moisture into the eastern half of the state.
- Maui officials are closely monitoring the storm and its potential impact over the burn-scar areas of Lahaina from the deadly fires on Aug. 8.

KONA LOW

- ▶ A LARGE, SLOW-MOVING STORM THAT TYPICALLY SETS UP WEST OF HAWAII
- ▶ WINDS SHIFT TO THE SOUTH & BRING UP TROPICAL MOISTURE TO THE ISLANDS
- ▶ PRODUCES HEAVY RAIN, STRONG WINDS AND FLOODING
- ▶ TYPICALLY OCCUR FROM LATE FALL TO EARLY SPRING (2-5/YEAR)
