Flood Threat

California

- California is facing another multi-day siege of stormy weather for several days starting Saturday, which could result in the potential for flooding rainfall, landslides, heavy mountain snow, strong winds and coastal flooding.
- The next atmospheric river arrives Saturday. However, this atmospheric river is not forecast to be particularly strong or long-lasting.
- Another strong low-pressure system and atmospheric river event will impact California beginning late Sunday and may last for several days before wrapping up Wednesday. This round will bring heavier rain and high mountain snow to Southern California. Heavy rain on already saturated ground from the previous systems will increase the flooding and landslide potential statewide.
- Northern California will pick up widespread rainfall totals of 3 to 5 inches through Wednesday, particularly in the coastal ranges and Sierra foothills below snow level.
- Central California's coastal ranges can expect rainfall totals of 2 to 5 inches through Wednesday. Generally, 1 to 3 inches of rain is expected in the Central Valley.
- Southern California will see rainfall totals of more than 3 inches from L.A. County westward to Santa Barbara County, with lesser amounts farther south and inland.
- Flooding and landslides will be a serious concern with the heavier rainfall totals.
