Snow Forecast Northeast U.S.

- A fast-moving clipper system is expected to bring additional snow to a region that is already well above its winter average.
- The FOX Forecast Center said an active weather pattern will continue across the eastern U.S. as an area of low pressure is expected to move across the Northern Tier and into the Great Lakes before tracking eastward into New England.
- The Great Lakes and Northeast will see the impacts of a fast-moving clipper system on Friday.
- New York City could see an additional 1 to 3 inches of snow, while cities like Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and Albany, New York, will only see up to an inch.
- Higher snow totals are expected in the elevated terrain of West Virginia. Winter Storm Watches have been issued for these mountainous areas, where 5 to 8 inches of snow is possible.
- Boston and coastal Massachusetts may see some ocean enhancement, potentially picking up 3 to 5 inches of snow through Saturday afternoon.
- As the system reaches the Atlantic by Sunday, it will briefly strengthen into a more organized coastal system while exiting offshore. Combined with strong high pressure to the west, an increased pressure gradient will generate gusty winds through Saturday.
