Snow Forecast Northern U.S.

- Another potential multi-day winter storm could impact millions across 25 states in the Northeast, as well as the Midwest beginning Sunday.
- According to the FOX Forecast Center, if key forecast ingredients come together, a swath of 6–8 inches of snow would coat a corridor from the Ohio Valley to portions of the coast along I-95.
- Low-end projections favor a swath of 1–3 inches of snow in the same region with more mixing of ice and rain.
- On Saturday a shot of cold air settles across the northern third of the country, which is necessary for significant snowfall.
- By Sunday, a weak disturbance will emerge from the Rockies, increasing southerly winds a few thousand feet above the surface.
- Those winds will funnel warmer, moisture-rich air northward, where it will ride up over the cold, dense air already in place.
- Based on current data, the greatest icing concern is centered along the Interstate 70 corridor and through the Ohio River Valley.
- Exactly when the Midwest and Northeast will see the impacts of this system will become clearer as we approach the event this weekend.
