WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

April 6, 2026

Potential Flood Risk

Hawaii

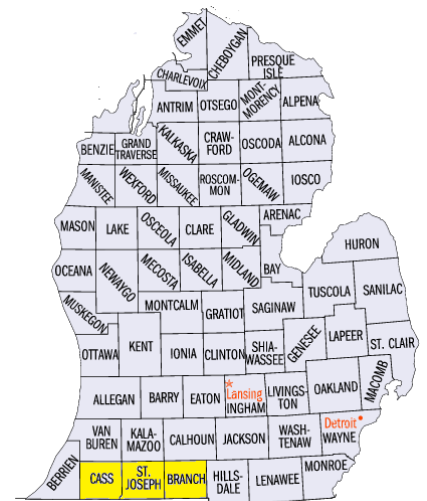

- Another round of heavy rain and potential flooding is heading toward Hawaii, following powerful back-to-back Kona low storms that caused life-threatening floods and widespread damage across the islands.
- This comes as many areas are still recovering from the earlier storms, which left homes and roads damaged by feet of water and mud.
- According to the FOX Forecast Center, the next round of rain is expected to organize by midweek.
- The low-pressure system will tap into moisture and strengthen the southerly winds, which will likely cause strong thunderstorms and heavy rain across areas that have already experienced record-breaking rainfall.
- The new storm system has the potential to become severe if all the ingredients are aligned, including gusty downslope winds that may worsen as the low-pressure system gets closer to the islands.
- Officials worry that even moderate rain could trigger more flash floods, runoff, and rising streams in regions that were already hit the hardest by the recent storms.

Declaration Request

Michigan
