Northeast Flooding

- Heavy rains soaked the Northeast Wednesday night, triggering some flooding in New Jersey and Pennsylvania and leaving lingering Flood Watches in effect for over 10 million people, including Philadelphia and much of New Jersey into Thursday.
- A large plume of moisture continued to work its way up the Eastern Seaboard on Thursday, pushing into New England after leaving widespread rainfall totals measured in multiple inches.
- The National Weather Service received over 60 reports of heavy rain and flooding Wednesday into Thursday morning, stretching from northern Maryland across eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey.
- Several streets were closed due to standing water, including Pennsylvania State Highway 32 near Taylorsville and New Jersey Highway 91 in North Brunswick. NWS storm spotters reported some water into homes and basements, with one report of a water rescue in Chaynay, Pennsylvania.
- Flood Warnings remain in effect for several rivers in New Jersey, along with some near the Philadelphia metro area. While Philadelphia reported 1.48 inches at its airport through midnight Thursday morning, some areas in the region have received as much as 2-3 inches of rain so far.
- The heaviest rain will push into New England later Thursday and will be over by Thursday night, but the slow-moving system will keep a chance of showers in the forecast through late Friday and even into Saturday morning.
