Fire Activity

Texas

- The Smokehouse Creek Fire north of Stinnett remains at about 1.08 million acres burned with 15% containment as of Sunday morning, fire officials said. At least two people have died in the blaze.
- Texas Gov. Greg Abbott said Friday that early estimates show as many as 500 structures have been destroyed.
- After a coating of snow graced the region on Thursday – slowing the fire’s spread and allowing firefighters to gain ground from 3% to 15% containment – warm, dry and windy weather returned for the weekend.
- NOAA’s Storm Prediction Center warned of critical fire weather conditions across the Texas Panhandle and into much of the southern High Plains, including Midland, Lubbock and Amarillo in Texas, as well as Pueblo in Colorado.
- As a result, Fire Weather Warnings are spread across 11 states, covering more than 10.5 million people through Sunday.
- Where the Smokehouse Creek and nearby Windy Deuce Fire are burning, wind gusts are forecast to reach 20-35 mph on Sunday, with gusts up to 55 mph possible.
- With these weather conditions, along with grass fuels in the area, the fires have the potential to move at 1-3 mph and burn as fast as 900-1,500 acres per hour.
- While some of that fire has now scorched land in Oklahoma, the acreage burned in Texas is now the largest wildfire in state history.
