WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

November 19, 2025

Severe Weather Outlook California

- Another Pacific storm will push south across California later this week, bringing more rain.
- "The heaviest rainfall from this storm will focus on Southern California, where most areas can expect 0.50 to 1 inch of rain, with locally higher amounts in the mountains," AccuWeather Chief On-Air Meteorologist Bernie Rayno said.
- Due to recent rain, some steep hillsides may already be unstable and more likely to give way when the next wave of rain arrives.
- San Francisco and Sacramento can expect showers from Wednesday night into Thursday, with enough rain to cause minor ponding in low-lying or poorly drained areas.
- The wettest stretch for Southern California this week is expected to be from Thursday night to Saturday morning.
- In Los Angeles, Thursday night's rain could be heavy enough to cause flooding in low-lying areas and may also trigger new debris flows.
- In San Diego, the heaviest rain is expected Thursday night, but showers may persist until midday Saturday.
