WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

December 30, 2025

Snow

Great Lakes

- Portions of New York could see feet of snow on New Year's Day, as gusty northwest winds from the east will continue to usher in cold air, creating the perfect conditions for a heavy lake-effect storm.
- The eastern shores of Lake Michigan, parts of upstate New York and northwestern Pennsylvania could see 3 to 5 inches.
- Areas just south of Buffalo, NY, and southward into Erie, PA, Syracuse and the Tug Hill Plateau could see even higher amounts, with localized totals of 12 to 18 inches.
- The storm could cause low visibility and wind gusts up to 70 mph near the lake shores.
- As of yesterday, more than 7,500 utility workers engaged in damage assessment, response, repair and restoration efforts, stated Hochul.
- Not only is New York under a State of Emergency, Winter Storm Warnings and Lake Effect Snow Warnings have also been issued for Syracuse, Buffalo and Erie, PA through Friday morning.
- On New Year's Eve into early New Year's Day, a weaker clipper is expected to move south from Canada through the Great Lakes.
