WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

May 19, 2023

Severe Weather Outlook

- The severe weather threat Friday focuses on a stretch from central Texas north and east into Oklahoma and Arkansas and a sliver of Louisiana.
- Over 15 million live in the area where NOAA's Storm Prediction Center has given a Level 2 severe weather risk on their five-point scale and expects hail and wind to be the primary concerns, but forecasters will also be watching for the threat of a few tornadoes and heavy rainfall.
- The front began to sweep across the northern Plains and Rockies on Wednesday, and that helped to produce thunderstorms in the region. On Thursday, the front stretched roughly from Minnesota to the Texas Panhandle and produced pockets of severe weather including over Wyoming.
- The FOX Forecast Center warns hail could be upwards of egg size on Friday. Once hailstones reach a diameter of one inch or larger, local National Weather Service offices issue a Severe Thunderstorm Warning for the storm cell.
- The front will arrive in the East by later Friday into Saturday.
