Severe Weather Outlook

- Following severe weather in the South and Mississippi Valley on Thursday, the cold front responsible will slow down across the South but still bring pockets of active weather.
- Any strong thunderstorms are expected in the Southeast from Alabama to the Carolinas.
- "The last couple of days with severe weather it's been very widespread. Today (Friday), there's going to be a lot of folks that are a miss," FOX Weather Meteorologist Britta Merwin said.
- The FOX Forecast Center said storm activity will begin to redevelop Friday night, with numerous showers and thunderstorms emerging Saturday, resulting in possible downpours capable of producing flash flooding.
- Widespread areas of 1-2 inches of rain with some spots reaching 3 inches of rain through Sunday morning.
- Storms will track into the Southeast by Sunday as an area of heavy rain will follow suit, with cities like Atlanta, Birmingham, Alabama and New Orleans seeing their rain and storm chances dramatically increase Sunday.
