WSP USA INSPECTION SERVICES DISASTER AWARENESS REPORT

July 3, 2025

Tropical Activity

Atlantic – Disturbance 1

- A front that has been causing heavy rain over the Carolinas will interact with an upper-level disturbance over Florida over the next few days.
- Out of that combination, a tropical depression or low-end tropical storm has a decent chance of forming off the Southeast coast. The National Hurricane Center has upped the odds to the high-medium range.
- Even if circulation develops, it's not likely to change the threat from this system, which is the potential for flooding. Pockets of 5-plus-inch rainfall have already occurred across Florida and coastal Georgia and the Carolinas. Significant additional rainfall is expected into next week, especially in eastern North Carolina.
- Through Saturday, the upper-level system that has been triggering the rain in Florida will remain in place, so tropical downpours are likely to continue.
- By Sunday, however, the focus shifts to the eastern part of the Carolinas and the potential tropical system. Though a tail of tropical moisture will still be draped across the Florida Peninsula.
- Early next week, it looks likely that the disturbance, tropical depression or tropical storm – whatever it ends up being – will track along the Carolina coast and out to sea.
- It's too early to know if the potential system will track inland or stay offshore of the Carolinas.
- It's not expected to become very strong, but if winds over the ocean reach 40 mph, it will get the name Chantal.
