Tropical Activity

Eastern Pacific – Disturbance 2

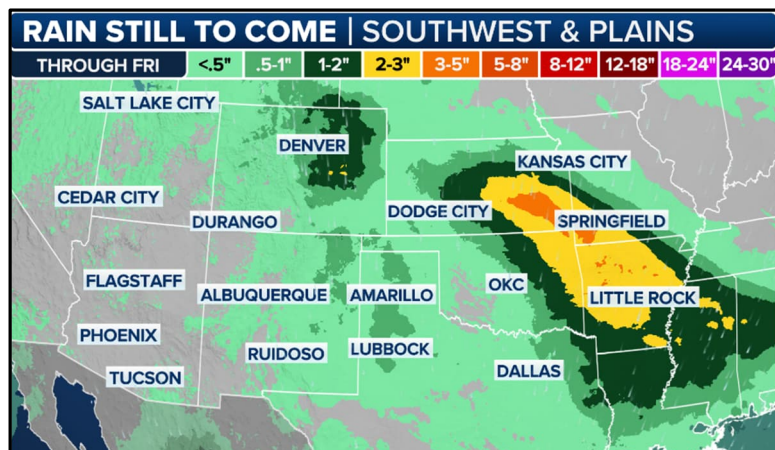

- A tropical wave located a few hundred miles south of the coast of southwestern Mexico is producing a large area of disorganized showers and thunderstorms.
- Appears favorable for gradual development of this system toward the end of the week.
- A tropical depression could form over the weekend while the system moves westward to west-northwestward at 10 to 15 mph across the central to western part of the eastern Pacific basin.
- Formation chance- 48 hours: Low (10%); 7 days: Med (50%)

Severe Weather Outlook

Southwest & Plains

- Monsoon season is in full swing, with areas of the Southwest seeing torrential rain and flooding.
- Abundant moisture continues to surge across the western and central U.S., and concerns are growing that more areas could see flooding.
- The FOX Forecast Center said that more than a dozen states across the West and central U.S. are under some type of flash flood threat this week.
- Thursday, Southern California and Arizona will get a temporary blast of extra moisture, but not from the monsoon – it's from what's left from Tropical Storm Juliette swirling in the Eastern Pacific.
- More than 25 cities in the Southwest are seeing one of their top-five driest years on record.
- Farther east in the Plains and Rockies widespread rainfall totals are likely from 3-5 inches with locally higher amounts possible.
- NOAA's Weather Prediction Center (WPC) placed portions of the Rockies and Plains in a flash flood risk on Wednesday.
