- A line of thunderstorms blasted through North Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas early Monday morning, bringing powerful wind gusts and heavy rain to the Interstate 20 and Interstate 35 corridors
- This same weather system delivered powerful severe weather to West Texas, including a supercell thunderstorm in Grand Falls, Texas, on Sunday afternoon.
- A second round of thunderstorms is expected to develop on Monday afternoon which will move across North and East Texas. These storms also carry the potential to develop supercells.

- Houston is just outside the Level 2 risk but could still see strong storms Monday afternoon.
- Meanwhile, a Flood Watch covers parts of North Texas, including the Dallas Metroplex through Monday afternoon, as these storms repeatedly soak many of the same areas.
- According to the FOX Forecast Center, most of these areas can expect 1-3 inches of rain through Monday.
- The greatest flood threat is concentrated in the Ark-La-Tex region, where NOAA's Weather Prediction Center has issued a Level 2 out of 4 Flash Flood Threat that includes Dallas, Shreveport, Louisiana, Little Rock, Arkansas, Jackson, Mississippi and Memphis, Tennessee.
